Well I could live without mod_ssl for the next hours, but I can't just go shutdown ssh on all boxes cause that would mean I'd have to go onsite to some 4 NOCs (two of them on the other side of the world) to have SSH get backup. Hmm. Maybe I'll just shut all SSL stuff down and have the NOC monkeys reboot them when the patch is here....

What's happening (I suppose) is that the port gets installed to /usr/local/lib whereas the the old version still is in /usr/lib where it belongs to as part of the base system which means that you probably have to overwrite the old lib by hand but I wouldn't want to guarantee that nothing is going to break if you do this. To make it short: it's probably best to just wait and update your boxes ASAP (I'm just glad I just got a bunch of Athlon XP 1800+ boxes which do make world in no time

Best regards,
Gabriel
