The problem can be corrected by upgrading the affected package to version 2.6.8.1-16.28 (for Ubuntu 4.10), 2.6.10-34.12 (for Ubuntu 5.04), or 2.6.12-10.30 (for Ubuntu 5.10). After a standard system upgrade you need to reboot your machine to effect the necessary changes.

Details follow:

A flaw was found in the module reference counting for loadable protocol modules of netfilter. By performing particular socket operations, a local attacker could exploit this to crash the kernel. This flaw only affects Ubuntu 5.10. (CVE-2005-3359)

David Howells noticed a race condition in the `add_key()`, `request_key()` and `keyctl()` functions. By modifying the length of string arguments after the kernel determined their length, but before the kernel copied them into kernel memory, a local attacker could either crash the kernel or read random parts of kernel memory (which could potentially contain sensitive data). (CVE-2006-0457)

[USN-263-1] Linux kernel vulnerabilities

An information disclosure vulnerability was discovered in the `truncate()` function for the XFS file system. Under certain conditions, this function could expose random unallocated blocks. A local user could potentially exploit this to recover sensitive data from previously deleted files. (CVE-2006-0554)

A local Denial of Service vulnerability was found in the NFS client module. By opening a file on an NFS share with `O_DIRECT` and performing some special operations on it, a local attacker could trigger a kernel crash. (CVE-2006-0555)

The ELF binary loader did not sufficiently verify some addresses in the ELF headers. By attempting to execute a specially crafted program, a local attacker could exploit this to trigger a recursive loop of kernel errors, which finally ended in a kernel crash. This only affects the amd64 architecture on Intel processors (EMT64). (CVE-2006-0741)

The `die_if_kernel()` function was incorrectly declared as "does never return" on the ia64 platform. A local attacker could exploit this to crash the kernel. Please note that ia64 is not an officially supported platform. (CVE-2006-0742)

Oleg Nesterov discovered a race condition in the signal handling. On multiprocessor (SMP) machines, a local attacker could exploit this to create many unkillable processes, which could eventually lead to a Denial of Service.

A memory leak was discovered in the handling of files which were opened with the `O_DIRECT` flag. By repeatedly opening files in a special way, a local attacker could eventually drain all available kernel memory and render the machine unusable. This flaw only affects Ubuntu 4.10.
