This next post says no default username and password exist. It also talks about the unit being locked out for exceeding a threshold of bad logon attempts, which may be what you are experiencing...

Dunno. That thing is old and the company has changed hands a few times.

Hello list-

I ran nmap -p 1-65535 against a host, and it came back with port 23 open.

I attempted to telnet into the host and received 'Unable to connect to remote host: Invalid Argument' immediately.

I browsed to host:23 and it appears that my browser is treating what is supposed to be an interactive session as a static page:

This is just plain text, no markup in the source.

How do I get to an interactive prompt? Am I going about this the wrong way?

Thanks
