I took a look at what they are doing.

Sneaky, a server side script to access your hard drive from the web browser (i.e. locally)

They are just setting a client side scripting item to look at your local drive from your machine.

Hi all,

I was sent the following address:

<http://www.security7.ch.vu/>

When entering, it claims that you are exposed and tracked and a lot of information is stored on your computer (doh..altho i dont keep names on it etc..).

What caught my attention is that the show you the contents of your root directory

(c:\ for a windows machine..).

What's alarming is that I don't see how this thing could've been done. I dont allow any shares, I dont allow any services, and unless it is an IE exploit of some sort, there is no other way to explain it. My firewall (TPF) handles all the microsoft

RE: www.security7.ch.vu

network issues and only internal LAN can even see my nbt name etc...
this is weird.
Anybody know how this is done ?

Regards,
Eli
