I won't say with 100% certainty, but I will say beyond reasonable doubt this is incorrect.

Which key is the fellow pressing? Try pressing the spacebar a few times before it counts to the fifth period. If it's ignoring keypresses, Shut the machine off, unplug the keyboard, plug it back in. turn the computer back on. if that fails, try another keyboard. If a known working keyboard also fails and it's ps2; see if your box will allow a usb keyboard and try that.

Your cdrom is booting first, so you set it correctly in the BIOS. And there is no "security" I'm aware of aside from a PCI/ISA card physically in the machine to cause it to ignore you and not boot from cd, assuming it is reading a valid keypress from you.

I sure did, KM. Next time, read more of the thread; Thanks for the url, I didn't remember what thread it was. See the last line there, " If a known working keyboard also fails and it's ps2; see if your box will allow a usb keyboard and try that."

Now, fuckoff troll.
