

Expert Witness sought in Canadian trial, will pay

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/comp.security.misc/2004-02/0435.html>

From: Robin Lee Powell (rlpowell_at_digitalkingdom.org)

Date: 02/18/04

Date: Wed, 18 Feb 2004 13:19:33 -0800

A friend of mine is on trial in Toronto, ON, Canada for something I'm not willing to discuss in a forum this public, but whether his computer could have been easily hacked or not, and in particular whether files could have been placed on his computer without his knowledge.

He is not in any meaningful sense guilty of what he's being accused of, but Canadian law makes it amazingly hard to demonstrate this; the burden of proof is all wrong.

His machine was a Win2K box permanently on and attached to the 'net by a cable modem.

I know how hackable that is, you know how hackable that is. But we need to demonstrate it to the court.

I will pay reasonable[1] fees plus all expenses for a well-credentialed computer security expert with no criminal record of any kind to testify at this trial.

The trial starts March 1; I didn't think of posting here any sooner, unfortunately.

Please e-mail me if you might be interested.

-Robin

[1]: OK, I'd probably pay unreasonable fees; e-mail me, we'll negotiate.

--

Me: <http://www.digitalkingdom.org/~rlpowell/>  I'm a male Robin.
"Constant neocortex override is the only thing that stops us all from running out and eating all the cookies." -- Eliezer Yudkowsky <http://www.lojban.org/>  .i cimo'o prali .ui