are you Nuts? There are often times when an exploit goes public and the patch has not been released.

Not very often and you need to visit a specially crafted web site. In reality the risk is VERY low.

Ehm... have you been sleeping when someone hijacked the server of advertiser FalkAG to spread IE trojans over many usually harmless and trusted big websites like NYTimes, Slashdot and even Yahoo? Still dizzing when some company bought some adspace from Google Ads for spreading WMF images?
There is no such thing like avoiding dangerous websites.

In Soviet Russia, websites are browsing at you !!!11

Heard about but like many other attacks our configuration protected us. As I said we have not had a computer security incident in more than 2 years. Still using IE and going strong.
