Ahh, for $20 WinXP users can drill another security hole in their heads and give someone else all their passwords.

How.... useful. To the software vendor, and to any crackers who break into his systems to harvest your passwords that have been doubtlessly transmitted to the vendor, with or without your knowledge, or left exposed by another un-code-reviewed, and doubtlessly flawed Microsoft based "feature".

Why don't the clients of this tattoo their passwords on their foreheads and save the crackers the time?
