The fact that is a TypeInitializerException seems to indicate that you have a static constructor of some sort in this class that is trying to initialize your class, so the exception is being thrown there. However, the underlying issue is either a local ACL problem (on a file or reg key or something) or a delegation issue if you are trying to access a component on another network node via some sort of RPC mechanism.

If this is an issue involving some local resources that are ACLed incorrectly, sometimes using filemon or regmon on the server and looking for "access denied" messages from the worker process will identify the problem and give you a quick fix.

If the issue is related to the RPC, then we need more details. Can you talk a bit more about the RPC mechanism in question, how the current Windows security context in your web application was established (IWA, Basic, forms auth, impersonation settings, etc.) and how you were expecting the security context to flow to the remote machine.

Hello All,

I have windows server 2003 with IIS 6.0..
I have a webservice that is using a vc7 dll which in turn is using a com dll...now....

there is a function there in that vc7 dll that is using the com dll to connect to a server running on different machine.

Now when I call that function from webservice its giving me eception

Re: Plz Help Needed! The type initializer threw an exception. ----> System.UnauthorizedAccessException: Access is de that

System.TypeInitializationException: The type initializer for "TraderComponent.InteropWeb" threw an exception. ---->
System.UnauthorizedAccessException: Access is denied.

TraderComponent is my vc7 dlls name...and interopweb is the class contaning that function..

BTW this whole thing is working fine in windowx XP...

I thnk it has something to do with the permission rights etc....

Plz help me out on this...
Wats causing the problem...

Thanks
Cheers...

Bye.
