

Re: Dot Net Web applications Support on Unix/Sun solarid/Linux

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.inetserver.iis.security/2002-11/6188.html>

From: John Alderson (jalderson.spamnot@adelphia.net)

Date: 11/25/02

From: "John Alderson" <jalderson.spamnot@adelphia.net>

Date: Mon, 25 Nov 2002 06:38:53 -0500

"Sameer" <sameer.khanna@irissoftware.com> wrote in message news:f8fe01c291f5$4b508b60$8df82ecf@TK2MSFTNGXA02...

> We are developing a web application using dot net > architecture. initially we are developing and deploying > the application on Windows 2000 but in future phases of > the project, we need to migrate the same application in > Unix / Sun Solaris / Linux . Can any one tell me that > whether it is feasible or not because i am not sure about > how IIS will work on these Operating systems and how the > aspx pages will then work or is there any other way > around. Or the final solution i know is java.
>
> Thanks

Sameer,

You want to look at the Mono project (<http://www.go-mono.com/>) and there is another project called DotGNU (<http://www.dotgnu.org/>) that you can also look into. Also, Microsoft has made available source code for the Common Language Runtime and support libraries that you can compile and run on FreeBSD, OSX and WinXP and I know folks were porting this over to Linux.

John Alderson