

Re: Can non-windows platform application use Active Directory of W2003?

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.security/2005-05/0805.html>

From: Paul Adare (padare_at_newsguy.com)

Date: 05/21/05

Date: Sat, 21 May 2005 04:08:23 -0400

In article <dc46f9924e9d43b1be7fd401efabfb0e@WinServerKB.com>, in the microsoft.public.security news group, kevin tho via WinServerKB.com <forum@WinServerKB.com> says...

> Thanks for the reply. Can you elaborate more on the way to do? For my > current proxy server, users will be authenticated in LDAP server, which > caters for authentication for proxy and qmail users. I would like to > integrate the current LDAP with Active Directory of W2003 such that when > users log on, their permissions (eg. internet user/qmail user or both and > mail quota etc) are valid after log on. What is the way to integrate these > attributes into Active Directory?
>

That would be entirely dependant on the application. You should check the documentation for the applications in question, and any email/support lists for these applications.

--

Paul Adare

MVP - Windows - Virtual Machine

<http://www.identit.ca/blogs/paul/>

Scientists were excited this week at having isolated a brief sound which occurred immediately before the Big Bang.

Apparently, the sound was, "uh oh".