

Limited Users / No AV software --How Safe

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.security/2005-12/msg00558.html>

- From: shawn modersohn <smmodersohn@xxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Thu, 29 Dec 2005 18:22:15 -0600
-

I don't feel like using reg hacks and special permissions to enable virus defs to be automatically downloaded and installed by limited user accounts. I haven't seen any AV software that installs to the home directory, I believe they all essentially insist on something in the 'Program Files' directory. Obviously, I am unwilling to create administrator accounts for all users just for virus defs and thereby creating a giant catch 22. The way I see it, if I can't install virus defs in a limited user account, I couldn't install most viruses either. I am about to eliminate this licensing and subscription headache altogether and opt for mandatory limited user accounts and XP upgrades. Any opinions? How would a sasser or other exploit potentially deal with limited user accounts? Thanks.

.