

Re: Linked Server Access Problems

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.sqlserver.security/2002-11/3303.html>

From: scott (scott911rscarrera@hotmail.com)

Date: 11/02/02

From: scott911rscarrera@hotmail.com (scott)

Date: 2 Nov 2002 07:29:37 -0800

Yes, the simple methods spelled out by MSDN were attempted.

Scott

"Ricky Artigas" <rya@easycall.net.ph> wrote in message news:<48e001c28223$53ad2e80$3aef2ecf@TKMSFTNGXA09>...

> *Hi Scott. Have you tried mapping your user's login to the > Admin user of your mdb and setting the password as blank?
> In access databases/mdb files, there is a default Admin
> user id which has no password.
> Under SQL Server's Linked Servers, you can specify the > login mappings from there. Hope this helps.*
>
>
> >-----Original Message-----
> >I have recently struggled with granting access to a > linked server > >database on a SQL 2K box. Only administrators could log > in to the > >client application and access the data in the linked
> server tables,
> >simple domain users could not. All a simple domain user > would receive
> >is an Error 7399: OLE DB > Provider 'Microsoft.Jet.OLEDB.4.0' reported > >an error. The SQL Server service (i.e. all SQL Services) > was running > >the under the DOMAIN\Administrator account. The non-> secure access
> >database was linked using a (UNC first then) named path,
> i.e.
> >E:\SQLData\Linked.mdb. I experimented with various > linkedsrvlogins
> >all to no avail. I was only able to finally grant access > to the > >simple domain users by allowing this group "Local Group"

> permissions
> >as Administrators on the SQL box. Incidentally, the > folder where my > >linked database was stored had wide open "everyone"
> permissions.
> >
> >There is no way this behavior is by design. Can someone > tell me what > >is missing from this puzzle?
> >
> >SQL 2K Service pack 3
> >Jet Service Pack 5
> >Access 97 database
> >
> >Thanks,
> >Scott
> >.
> >