

Re: minimum OS user level to operate SQL Server

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.sqlserver.security/2003-11/0334.html>

From: Ray Higdon (rayhigdon_at_higdonconsulting.com)

Date: 11/21/03

Date: Fri, 21 Nov 2003 13:49:12 -0500

They don't need to have any windows security, you can assign this all through SQL. Just the service that runs SQL will need windows security. Making them a system administrator would give them full control over SQL.

HTH

--

Ray Higdon MCSE, MCDBA, CCNA

--

```
"djc" <noone@nowhere.com> wrote in message
news:u9rrYCFsDHA.2508@TK2MSFTNGP10.phx.gbl...
> I need to know what the minimum is for a user to have full control over > SQLServer2000 but nothing else in the OS.
>
> A while back I was in a rush to get someone access and had problems. I wound > up making the user account a member of the 'server operators' windows > built-in security group. I really don't want to keep it that way.
>
> 1) What windows permissions/privelages are needed at a minimum to have full > control of SQL Server.
> 2) What SQLServer permissions/privelages are needed at a minimum to have > full control of SQL Server.
>
> Thanks!
>
>
```