

Re: ASP.Net Permissions

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.sqlserver.security/2004-07/0396.html>

From: Mary Chipman (mchip_at_online.microsoft.com)

Date: 07/31/04

Date: Fri, 30 Jul 2004 20:08:12 -0400

If you want to use integrated security, then you need to enable the ASPNET windows account and grant it permissions in the database since that is the worker process account that asp.net uses. However, it may not be that simple if SQLS and your web server are running on different boxes. There is an excellent asp.net security best practices whitepaper you should read before proceeding further:

<http://www.microsoft.com/downloads/release.asp?ReleaseID=44047>

--Mary

On 30 Jul 2004 04:13:22 -0700, postings@alexshirley.com (Alex Shirley) wrote:

>Hi

>

>Try as I might I really can't work out to do this (I've searched >usenet and help).

>

>My ASP.NET application needs to access an SQL Server 2000 database (on >a Windows 2003 box). I appear to be running mixed mode authentication.

>

>I want to connect to the box using integrated security. I think all I >need to do is apply appropriate permissions to 'NT AUTHORITY\NETWORK >SERVICE'.

>

>I can't work out where and how to do this! What permissions and which >app I use to make the changes etc?

>

>Can anybody help?

>

>Sorry for the lame question.

>

>Cheers

>

>Alex