

Re: How to control the security in this case?

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.sqlserver.security/2005-07/0115.html>

From: Ivan (Ivan_at_discussions.microsoft.com)

Date: 07/19/05

Date: Tue, 19 Jul 2005 00:38:09 -0700

Hi Uri,

It is allowed that the colleague in the regional office to create his own DTS. I just don't want to view the DTS created in my head office. Besides setting password in each DTS package, is there any other way? Thanks.

Ivan

"Uri Dimant" wrote:

> Hi, Alejandro
> I'm afrais that does not solve the problem. I still keep seeing the DTS's > created by others.
>
>
> "Alejandro Mesa" <AlejandroMesa@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message > news:B1A8ECBE-047C-4095-889A-A7DA9C4BFD04@microsoft.com...
> > Open the packages in design mode, use "save as" and set the owner and user > > password.
> >
> >
> > AMB
> >
> > "Ivan" wrote:
> >
> > > Dear all,
> > >
> > > I have a SQL Server 2000 in my head office, it has several databases.
> > > However, one of the databases is maintained by a colleague of a regional > > > office. He has the all the authority (read / write) to work on this > > database.
> > > But there is a problem, we have developed some DTS packages in head > > office > > > and this colleague is going to make his own packages. We would like to > > have a > > > control that this colleague is not able to access our DTS packages (not > > even microsoft.public.sqlserver.security: Re: How to control the security in this case?

> > > read), he can only opens his own the DTS packages.
> > > Is there any control to achieve this purpose? Please advise. Thanks a > lot.
> > >
> > > Ivan
> > >
> > >
>
>
>