

Re: User can't access his own objects

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.sqlserver.security/2005-11/0163.html>

---

From: Uri Dimant (urid\_at\_iscar.co.il)

Date: 11/27/05

Date: Sun, 27 Nov 2005 08:14:08 +0200

Hi

You'll have to move logins from Server A as well. How to do that? Search on Google for 'sp_help_revlogin ' and you'll find the answer

"JohnnyMagz" <JohnnyMagz@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message news:5969529E-7A20-47D5-B904-0658E6C76381@microsoft.com...

> I'm fairly new to DBA tasks and I could use some help with this problem. I > am > trying to script out the structure of a database from server A and create > that database on server B by running the script. I used Enterprise Manager > to > create the SQL Script. I selected a single table on the "General" tab; I > took > the defaults on the "Formatting" tab; and I selected all four Security > Scripting Options from the "Options" tab.
>
> I ran the script without error, but when I attempted to run a select > statement against a table owned by the user 'tims', Query Analyzer tells > me > that the object doesn't exist. I am able to access the object using it's > fully qualified name. NOTE: a login for the user 'tims' already exists in > this sql server. The uid and sid in sysusers do not match from server A
> and
> server B though.
>
> I suspect that I'm missing something – a rule about transferring > logins/database accounts between servers. Please help if you can.
>
> Many Thanks!
> – Johnny