You need backups of database you want to be able to recover. So if your system totally crashed and you lost all your disks, how would you get the system back up and running as it was before the disks all crashed? You'd need backups of your system databases (except tempdb) and your user databases. How often depends upon your business needs, changes to your system and user data, etc. You can read about backup and recovery in books online for whichever version of SQL Server you are running.
