Linda,

Sorry, but not from me. When I tried to duplicate your situation, I always get a prompt for the password. If nobody more knowledgeable responds here, perhaps post in microsoft.public.sqlserver.odbc.

Quick question, so I tried to simulate the ODBC set-up using the "sa" account but everytime the user goes in, the user has login with the sa account before opening any of the tables without a prompt. Anyone know how to suppress the login prompt? The password just wont stay in the ODBC dsn file.
