

microsoft.public.win2000.security: Re: how to give a common user the power to modify registry?

Re: how to give a common user the power to modify registry?

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.win2000.security/2003-04/1423.html>

From: Karl Levinson [x y], mvp (levinson_k@despammed.com)

Date: 04/21/03

From: "Karl Levinson [x y], mvp" <levinson_k@despammed.com>

Date: Mon, 21 Apr 2003 08:30:35 -0400

If it's just specific registry entries, try using REGEDT32 as Administrator to change the permissions on those registry values.

Or, you could do something like use a Runas icon to launch REGEDIT or REGEDT32 as Administrator. There are ways to do this without having to know or enter the password every time, though this is not necessarily 100% secure from abuse and misuse:

<http://securityadmin.info/faq.htm#runas>

"Richard Lu" <richard.lu@orientop.com> wrote in message news:000301c307b7$8133a180$3301280a@phx.gbl...

> i have a user named lutao, which is a member of "users"
> group, so i cant use this identification to install > software that need to modify registry. how can i give it
> the power to modify registry without move it to the other > groups?
> thank!