

Re: Why enterprise root CA automatically issue certificates.

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.win2000.security/2004-01/1427.html>

---

From: izaal (izaal.choa_at_reforma.com)

Date: 01/21/04

Date: 21 Jan 2004 09:52:00 -0800

Brian Komar <bkomar@komarconsulting.com.nospam> wrote in message news:<MPG.1a771c9b7bea02ea9896ad@msnews.microsoft.com>...

> In article <d51193cc.0401200841.7a1c35fe@posting.google.com>, > izaal.choa@reforma.com says...

>> Brian Komar <bkomar@komarconsulting.com.nospam> wrote in message news:<MPG.1a766a2a1acce81e9896ac@msnews.microsoft.com>...

>>> In article <d51193cc.0401191208.9af83ba@posting.google.com>,

>>> izaal.choa@reforma.com says...

>>>> Microsoft win2000 Enterprise Root CA NOT automatically issue >>>> certificates?

>>>>

>>>> I want that an Administrator authorize any certificate request before >>>> the certificate could be issued. I need to use an Enterprise root CA >>>> because EAP-TLS only work with Enterprise CAs. Is it possible?

>>>>

>>>> Thanks.

>>>>

>>>>

>>> You can change the default properties of the CA.

>>>

>>> 1) Open the Certification Authority

>>> 2) View the properties of the CA

>>> 3) View the Policy module

>>> 4) Change the default Request Handling from using the certificate template >>> to set the certificate request status to pending.

>>>

>>> Brian

>>

>>

>> Thaks Brian, but that procedure only works in a standalone CA. In an >> Enterprise CA the option is disabled, is there a way to enable it?

>>

> For an enterprise CA in Windows 2000, the default behavior is to base > the enrollment decision based on the DACL on the certificate template.

> If you want to use pending of certificates, I recommend upgrading to the > win2k3 enterprise server running on enterprise edition.

microsoft.public.win2000.security: Re: Why enterprise root CA automatically issue certificates.

- >
- > Then, on a certificate template basis, you can choose to require CA
- > certificate manager approval for a specific certificate template.
- >
- > With Windows 2000, the option is not available, as you have seen.
- >
- > Brian

Thanks Brian!!!