

Re: Local Security Settings

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.win2000.security/2005-08/0214.html>

From: Dan (dan_at_discussions.microsoft.com)

Date: 08/19/05

Date: Thu, 18 Aug 2005 16:00:02 -0700

Steve,

Thanks a lot,,, you pointed me in the right direction.

Dan

--

Dan

"Steven L Umbach" wrote:

> Make sure that the policy was configured on a container that contains the > computer accounts. For such a small domain you probably did this in Domain > Security Policy? If that is the case, reboot or use the command secedit > /refreshpolicy machine_policy /enforce on the other computers to see if that > fixes the problem. Also check your dns settings so that the domain > controller points only to itself as it's preferred dns server in tcp/ip > properties and that all the domain computers point only to the domain > controller as their preferred dns server. You can use the command ipconfig > /all to check tcp/ip configuration. You will also find the support tools > dcdiag [domain controller only] and netdiag to check for the health of your > domain computers in regards to network connectivity, dns name resolution, > and computer account/secure channel integrity. The support tools are located > on the install disk in the support/tools folder where you install them by > using the setup file there. Also make it a habit of using Event Viewer to > check the various logs on your computers when you are experiencing problems > and also routinely to check for errors that may mean impending problems, > particularly on your domain controller.. --- Steve

>

>

> "Dan" <dan@discussions.microsoft.com> wrote in message > news:4B096D30-C779-471B-AADA-8FFB7885FC8D@microsoft.com...

> > Hi,

> >

> > I have a Windows 2000 Server with 5 Client machines... I have set the > > security audit polices on the server and they have propagated down to > > three > > of the machines but two of machines effective settings are not > > correct...So > > they did not receive them... Any help or suggestions would be greatly > > appreciated...

> >

> > Thanks

> > --

> > Dan

>

>

>

Re: Local Security Settings