

security update repeats "indefinitely"

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.win2000.security/2006-09/msg00075.html>

- From: Martin Glodde <glodde@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Fri, 22 Sep 2006 08:38:18 -0400
-

I recently upgraded my computer from Win98 to Win2K. Afterwards, Win2K and Win98 were on the same partition. I installed Service Pack 4, then all other security updates, then IE 6 SP1. Now I have this problem: Windows keeps telling me that there is one security update ready to install: "Security Update for Microsoft Data Access Components (KB832483)". When I click on the update icon in the task bar and click to install it, I get the message that the update was installed successfully. However, a couple of minutes later, the same update message pops up again in the task bar. Repeating the installation doesn't help – it always keeps popping up. Any idea what causes this and how I can get rid of the problem? How do I know if the update is installed or not?

Thanks,
Martin

.