

Re: Initial IPSEC policy

Source: <http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.windows.server.security/2004-01/0315.html>

---

From: Harald Haitzma (harald.haitzma\_at\_acs.it)

Date: 01/28/04

Date: Wed, 28 Jan 2004 08:26:01 +0100

I would like to secure all the IP-Traffic between certain PCs with the DC.
I tried to set the policy so kerberos ist not secure. But i can't get the other policy working. Any ideas what went wrong?

thxs
Harald

"Chris" <chris@dev.nul> schrieb im Newsbeitrag news:%23ET0EXT5DHA.2496@TK2MSFTNGP09.phx.gbl...
> No this is still the same in XP and 2003. You are referring to > <http://support.microsoft.com/default.aspx?kbid=254949>
>
> Non-domain members could never join the domain if your DC's required
> kerberos authenticated IPSec communication across the board.
>
> Chris Weber
>
>
>
> "Harald Haitzma" <haraldhaitzma@hotmail.com> wrote in message
> news:eDS$53Q5DHA.2540@TK2MSFTNGP11.phx.gbl...
> > I Have a Win2003 Domain with only WinXP clients.
> >
> > On a Win2000 Server i read following:
> > Using IP Security (IPSec) to protect traffic from a non-domain member to > the > > domain controller is currently not supported in Windows 2000 because it > is > > not possible for non-domain computers to get the initial IPSec policy > from > > the domain controller once a domain controller (DC) requires IPSec to > > communicate, and because non-domain member computers cannot use Kerberos > as > > the IPSec/IKE authentication method to authenticate IKE with their > domain
> > controller and with trusted domain controllers on the domain in all > cases.
> >

> > Is this changed within XP and 2003?

> >

> > Thxs

> >

> >

> >

>

>