

Re: tricky question?

Re: tricky question?

---

Source:

<http://www.derkeiler.com/Newsgroups/microsoft.public.windows.server.security/2006-03/msg00206.html>

---

- From: "Nospam" <nospam@xxxxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Sat, 25 Mar 2006 08:40:20 -0000
-

"Ivan Mckenzie" <imck@xxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
<news:OBO1ZU3TGHA.4340@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>

Hi everyone, is it possible to prohibit a local administrator to kill a specific process through task manager. I have quite a lot of local administrators that are killing the anti-virus process.

Thanks to all,

Ivan Mckenzie

Personally I would find out WHY they are killing the anti-virus program. If it going wrong, then sort out the problem.

If they just don't like anti-virus programs or don't understand the dangers of using a PC without virus protection, then let management deal with the problem.

A threat of dismissal if the computers are NOT running approved anti-virus programs usually does the trick!!

A person with administrator privileges should always act responsibly, so find out why they are killing the anti-virus process. If they can't give a reason then remove their administrator privileges!

John..

.

Re: tricky question?