I know another guy who basically thought he had the answer to the world's security issues well at least a smaller part than you say you have an answer to and here we are a couple of years later and he still hasn't put anything useful out the door.

The problem is that you have to balance security with usability. It's possible to make a 100% secure system which passively defends against attacks originating online, local user elevation, and physical attacks.

All you need is a little concrete.
