>I am having the same problem with a company called endmessages.com I have found software on my computer that was identified as a trojan horse, and removed it but am still having the same problem. I have purchased several security programs from McAfee in an effort to solve this problem, but it just seems to be getting more and more complicated all the time. I am monitoring all outgoing/incoming communications and am surprised at how much is taking place without my pushing a button. I am getting really paranoid now unfortunately, not feeling that I have control over access to my computer.
