My Norton AntiVirus program quarantined a file called msupdater.exe telling me that it has a trojan horse that cannot be fixed. It recommends that I delete the file and replace it with a clean copy. I cannot find a copy. I looked on the Windows CD that came with my system (Dell), and even on the computers at my office just to see if I could find it.

My computer has not searched for Windows updates in a long time so I suspect I should have this file. Can anyone shed some light on this and possibly tell me how I can get a clean copy of this file?

Thanks,
Eric
