You know how Microsoft says you can't disable or delete all administrator profiles? They lie.

My boyfriend's uncle set himself as the administrator and disabled the old administrator default. When he gave the computer to my boyfriend and my boyfriend changed the users to his own accounts, he looked away from the computer before giving one of his accounts administrator status and after deleting his uncle's old account (the last remaining active administrator). Now, there are no accounts with administrator status and we cannot re-install Windows XP and boot from the CD because it is not recognizing it. It reads it just fine in windows and simply says we cannot access it. So...now what?
