More like "One size fits 95%..."

Nope. See:

Anyone reading the seven newsgroups that Karl routinely posts this to.

A FAQ is a list of Frequently Asked Questions and is common in many newsgroups, especially technical ones. It is designed to answer most of the repetitive questions found in the group it is posted to. If people would read the FAQ they wouldn't post the same question the last eight people did just to wait a few hours and receive the same answer.

In fact, if people would use Google they could often get their problems solved quicker.
