Thanks for the info but neither option seems to offer a solution.

The popup I'm getting only offers an OK button and it is a system popup as opposed to the website generating it. By definition OK is agreeing that the software can't be downloaded. I want to tell XP Pro to ignore its suggestion and take mine, i.e., download and run the applet, (if that's what it is). The popup also appears without the 'information bar' which suggests to me that it has nothing to do with the 'information bar'.

I have the website in the trusted zone and have made sure settings are low for this area, although I suppose what I really want is non-existent rather than low, medium or high!

Can I de-activate the information bar and all internet security settings even if that means a registry hack?

I have also checked all the advanced 'internet settings' that seem remotely able to influence this but no joy.

I know this would work in 98SE but having recently moved to XP I don't really want to have to take a 'backward' step.

Any further ideas most appreciated...
