Hi, I am writing with an update regarding this issue. I disabled the Guest Account and created a new User Account. Problem is there too, however something really odd is going on. I get the "Access Denied" dialog box, but I am able to access ALL programs and IE works just fine as well. I can browse and use all programs. However, this little two word dialog box just sits on screen always. I can put it under the programs, which hides it, move it around the screen and even place it so it is nearly gone at each edge of the screen and under the taskbar. What is up with this darn annoying dialog box? If Access is Denied, what access is being denied? Why if Access is Denied am I able to use every feature on the User Account? Same thing in the Guest Account as well. How do I get rid of this dialog box? While I am able to make it unobtrusive, I have to fiddle with it each time I or somebody else logs on to the account. Very annoying! lol At least the account is functioning, so progress is occurring, which is good news. I am in contact with Corel, the program I suspect is at the root of this, but so far the person responding to my queiries is unable to fix this as well. He told me to go into C:\Program Files\Corel and make sure the Guest Account has Full Permissions. Then to go to HKEY_Current_User\Software\Corel, right click then select permissions and make sure the Guest Account has Full Permissions there too. However, niether this folder or key have the Guest Account listed as an authorized User. The folder has myself, the creator owner, administrators, power users (me) and Users, but not Guest. Isn't Guest a member of the Users Group? The Registry Key
