We have learnt here in D.C. that Microsoft will not be attaining Common Criteria certification of Vista and W2K8. This concerns us greatly, as most of our clients are Federal agencies that require Common Criteria evaluation. We will not be able to deploy new OS to these agencies without this CC certification. Many people will lose their jobs if government can no longer use Windows. What is Microsoft going to do about this obstacle?

You need to ask Microsoft that question. This is a public newsgroup hosted on Microsoft servers. While some Microsoft employees post occasionally, the vast majority of regular helpers (like me) are volunteers who don't work for the company. If you work for a company that deploys operating systems, then you have a regular channel to Microsoft licensing and support. Use it.
