I thought this utility would be invaluable for storing the many different user names and passwords I need to conduct business over the Internet. But the very first User Name I tried to add to the utility was rejected because it isn't in the "user@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxx" format. This may be a complete shock to the sheltered folks at Microsoft, but MANY websites don't require this format for their user names, and I don't want to use my email address everytime. Is there no way around this format restriction? Or am I trying to use this utility in a manner for which it wasn't intended? If so, does anyone have any solutions to the problem of managing your user names and passwords? Thanks!

What utility are you talking about?
