rude rude attitude again or still.

and it is supposed to be an mvp.

really feel sorry for any customers you may have. as you would not have them long showing that attitude.

If you can't figure out how to click on the links that Vanguard already gave you, you're not going to be able to do anything more complex on a computer than click the mouse or type an email. If that.

Read the links and don't multipost this again.

Oh, and read these links while you're at it so people might actually want to help you:

How to Post:

---- REPLY SEPARATOR ----

Only required because above poster used QUOTED-PRINTABLE format.

When posting to newsgroups, do NOT use quoted-printable format.

* Not all NNTP clients handle quoted-printable format.

- Some users still use console-mode (non-GUI) NNTP clients.

- The long lines may not wrap properly.

- Scrolling is needed if the long line does not get wrapped.

- The long line may get truncated at the window's width.

- Quoted-printable format uses special character sequences for logical formatting. View the raw source of your post. Text-only clients may show that encoding when viewing your post.

* Quoting levels get mangled, especially for multiple replies.

* In replies, there is no clear delineation of content.

- Cannot tell what content is from the original poster and what is from the respondent.

- Makes impossible to determine who said what when a reply inserts comments inline with the quoted content.

Do not use HTML format. Post using plain-text format.

Yeah, advice from someone that can't figure out that quoted-printable and HTML are not to be used when posting to Usenet.
